Tumor necrosis factor alpha (TNFalpha) is a cytokine that induces degeneration of neurons and astrocytes. This study was undertaken to examine the effect of TNFalpha on calbindin-D9k in cultured rat cortical astrocytes. TNFalpha decreased calbindin-D9k immunoreactivity in a dose-dependent manner. This effect was completely abolished by etanercept, an antagonist of TNF receptor, in both cell bodies and processes of cultured astrocytes. The effect of TNFalpha was also mediated by the mitogen-activated protein kinases (MAPK) pathways. It was reduced by the PD 98059, an inhibitor of the MAPK kinase, but enhanced by the SB 203580 and SB 610125, inhibitors of the p38 and the extracellular signal-regulated kinase (ERK) 1/2, respectively. TNFalpha-induced down-regulation of calbindin-D9k in astrocytes was attenuated by TPD 086, a calcium channel blocker. These results demonstrate that TNFalpha induces down-regulation of calbindin-D9k through the induction of intracellular calcium elevation. For insurers, sharing data is a no-brainer Today, the European Union is going to adopt its new General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR). The purpose of the legislation is to protect the citizens of Europe from unsafe or illegal data practices. The new rules make it easier to ensure that insurance companies do not share the personal data of their clients. Under the new regulation, the insurance industry has a responsibility to comply with a set of privacy principles and rules. Insurers in Europe will have to explicitly ask their customers for permission before they are allowed to use their personal data. As a result, insurers will have to agree to new terms of engagement. Insurers will also have to immediately delete personal data that they no longer need. At the same time, they will have to change the terms f678ea9f9e
